"MADE IN CANADA"

IN 1705, the colonists of New France, owing to the loss of supply ships from the Mother Country, were forced to manufacture rough cloth from nettles and the inner bark of baswood. In 1737 furnaces were built in the St. Maurice Valley, Quebec, to smelt iron ore. From such humble beginnings Ganadian industry was developed. Today 22,000 Canadian factories and mulls pay waga annually of nearly $500,000,000 and turn out merchandise to the value of about 33,000,000,000 per annum.

per annum.
This great organization, of national and international reputation, was not created without difficulty, despite willing workers and an abundance of raw materials and water power. For the Canadian manufacturer of 25 or 30 years ago was an inexperienced youth compared to the industrial magnates of the outside world. Small Canadian workshops, however, were gradually transformed into large plants, the quality of goods was steadily improved and new markets were developed.

Shortly after the Great War opened Canadian industry was a taxed to the umout to meet domestic needs and to supply the army. Then came the depressing aftermath. Between 1920 and 1924 over 1100 manufacturing establishments were closed. It took real courage and genius to survive under such adversity. But mow, Canadian industry it on solid now, Canadian industry is on solid ground, at home and abroad.

A strong industrial organization is essential to a well-balanced econ-omic structure. Realizing this, The Canadian Bank of Commerce The Canadian Bank of Commerce built up, early in its career, a service based upon the develop-ment of Canadian industry. To-day, over 200 of this Bank's 574 branches serve the manufacturers of Canada.
